Poverty eradication

Poverty has been cited as one of the misfortunes of the developing countries. In order to get rid of poverty, there has to be efforts by both donor and recipient countries to address the causes of and solutions to poverty. At a conference for development held in Monterry in 2002, it was agreed that each country is responsible for its own development. Each country should enact the reforms that generate growth and promote trade and investment. At this meeting; the participants agreed that there was need to find solutions based on good governance, sound policies, and the rule of law and to channel all resources to finance development. This was seen as the key to getting rid of poverty.

They also agreed that good financial markets, high standards of products, good economic policies and infrastructure such as information technology were important. These would help economies to grow. Apart from wide economic reforms, humanitarian programmes should be refocused to finding ways to stabilize production and incomes in famine prone countries .Food aid and other humanitarian programmes are merely temporary measures without any lasting impact.

The 2030 Agenda acknowledges that eradicating poverty in all its forms and dimensions, including extreme poverty, is the greatest global challenge and an indispensable requirement for sustainable development.
The first Sustainable Development Goal aims to “End poverty in all its forms everywhere”. Its seven associated targets aims, among others, to eradicate extreme poverty for all people everywhere, reduce at least by half the proportion of men, women and children of all ages living in poverty, and implement nationally appropriate social protection systems and measures for all, including floors, and by 2030 achieve substantial coverage of the poor and the vulnerable

As recalled by the foreword of the 2015 Millennium Development Goals Report, at the Millennium Summit in September 2000, 189 countries unanimously adopted the Millennium Declaration, pledging to “spare no effort to free our fellow men, women and children from the abject and dehumanizing conditions of extreme poverty”. This commitment was translated into an inspiring framework of eight goals and, then, into wide-ranging practical steps that have enabled people across the world to improve their lives and their future prospects. The MDGs helped to lift more than one billion people out of extreme poverty, to make inroads against hunger, to enable more girls to attend school than ever before and to protect our planet.

Nevertheless, in spite of all the remarkable gains, inequalities have persisted and progress has been uneven. Therefore, the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development and its set of Sustainable Development Goals have been committed, as stated in the Declaration of the Agenda, “to build upon the achievements of the Millennium Development Goals and seek to address their unfinished business”.
