

UGANDA NATIONAL EXAMINATIONS BOARD
Uganda Advanced Certificate of Education

P620/1 MUSIC

SCORING GUIDE
FOR THE SAMPLE PAPER

SECTION A

Item 1 – AURAL AND HARMONY

A candidate, in this item is expected to:

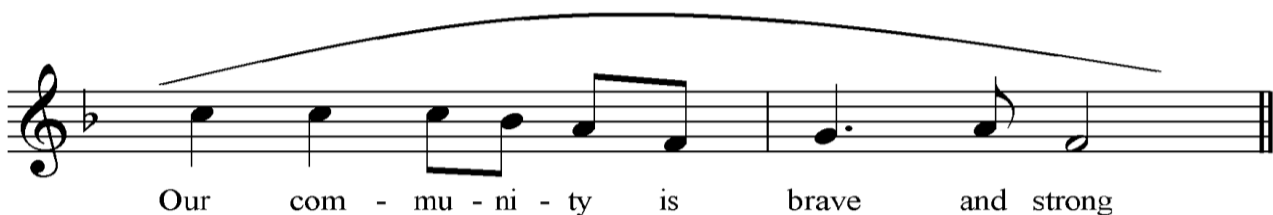

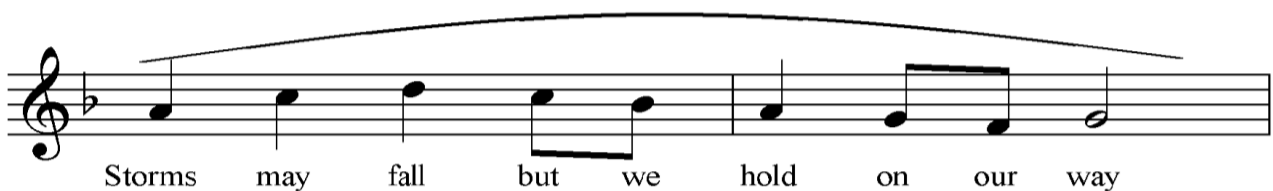

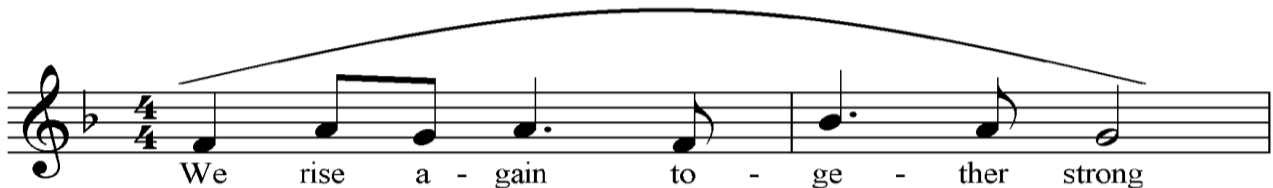

Listen to the recording and transcribe the dictated melody and lyrics and thereafter harmonise the song by adding Alto, Tenor and Bass.

Ensure that the pitch and rhythms are correct.

Align the lyrics to the right pitch and rhythm.

Follow the proper rules of harmony to provide the alto, tenor and bass to the dictated melody.

Each candidate harmonises the song in their own way.

Item 2 - COMPOSITION

A candidate is given one task, it requires him/her to compose an 8-bar melody with lyrics in response to the problem in the scenario.

A candidate, in this item is expected to:

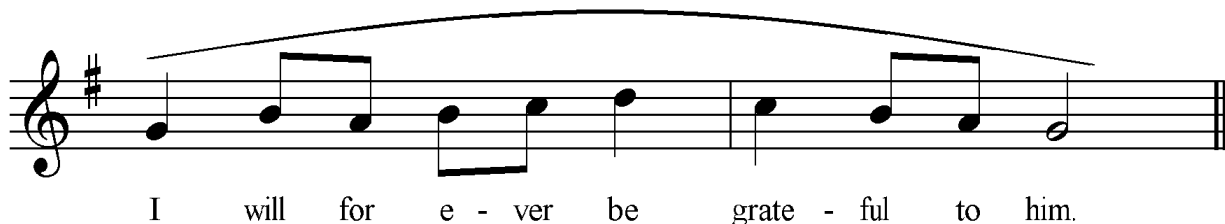

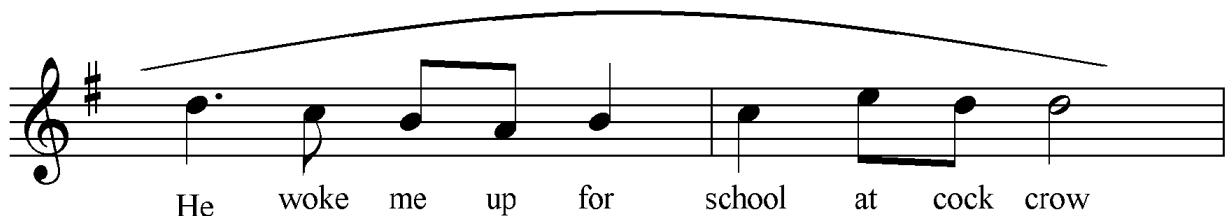

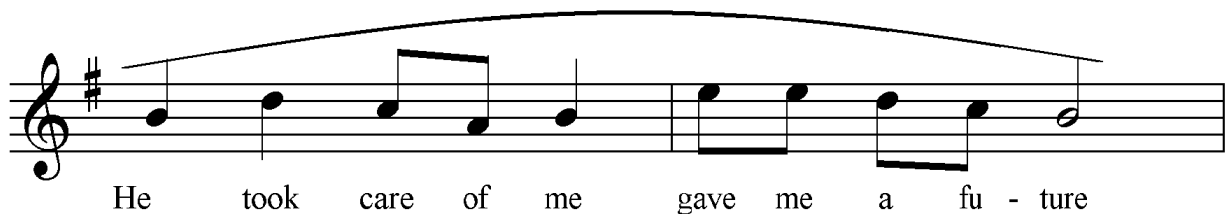

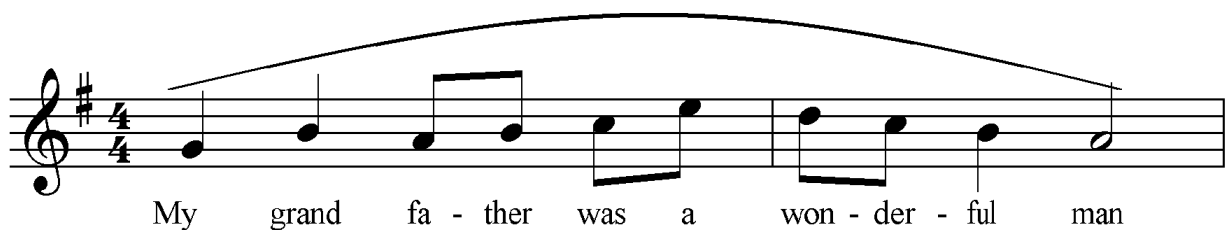

Identify the problem in the scenario

Create lyrics for an 8-bar song

The message in the lyrics should reflect the situation/challenge in the scenario

Compose an 8-bar melody that suits the lyrics written

The composed melody should reflect the mood and atmosphere of the situation

SECTION B

PART I

Items 3&4 – MUSIC ANALYSIS

Item 3 and 4 are parallel items. A candidate chooses one.

A candidate, in this item is expected to:

- i. Read the scenario presented and identify the challenge/situation in the scenario
- ii. Give a general introduction to the essay
- iii. Analyse the music in relation to the elements of music
- iv. Concludes in line with the scenario
- v. Analyses by mentioning the $\frac{3}{4}$ of the elements in the song, explaining them and linking them to the problem in the scenario presented.

The candidate's response should be in form of an essay and the following attributes should be exhibited

GUIDE FOR EXPECTED RESPONSES - ITEM 3

Candidate writes an introduction showing the reason for analysing the music presented in relation to the performance.

In consideration of the two songs, evaluates the elements of Music presented in both songs. (This should be presented in paragraphs for each analysed element).

Concludes by giving a personal opinion on what would be the better choice for the celebration.

EXAMPLE OF POSSIBLE RESPONSES

Kibi Community Performing Group is in a bind and needs to understand the two songs “Mu Kkubo Eryo’musalaba” and “Yozefu Mukasa” for them to have an exceptional performance. They will need to study the musical elements that appear in both songs for them to choose which one will best suit presentation at the Uganda Martyrs Celebration.

Message is one of the elements of to be considered in understanding the two pieces. Message refers to the meaning of the song as derived from the words or lyrics given. The song Yozefu Mukasa is praising Yozefu Mukasa who is one of the Martyrs that were persecuted. It talks about how he was beheaded for the sake of his religion and faith.

On the other hand, Mu Kkubo Eryo'musalaba encourages people to sacrifice their lives for Jesus Christ and also encourage those who know and believe in the creator to confess his hallowed name. The messages in the two songs is all about being courageous and proclaim what you believe in and die for it. Therefore, these songs are relevant for presentation by Kibi Community Performing Group during Uganda Martyrs celebration.

Members of Kibi Community Performing Group also need to understand the tempo in the two songs. Tempo is the speed of a song. The tempo in Yozefu Mukasa is $d=152$ while tempo for Mu Kkubo Eryo'musalaba is $d=160$. Both tempos are fast however, Mu Kkubo Eryo'musalaba is slightly faster than Yozefu Mukasa. The tempo for the two songs makes them suitable for the celebration of Uganda Martyrs by Kibi Community Performing Group because they are both fast and celebrations are meant to be vibrant and lively. The fast tempo brings the celebratory environment of the day.

Repeat marks are another music element Kibi Community Performing Group needs to understand. To repeat in music is to sing again. In both songs there are repeat signs. For example, in Mu Kkubi Eryo'musalaba there is dal segno sign in bars 17 and 24 which tells a singer to go back to the sign and sing through once again. Meanwhile in Yozefu Mukasa there is II: :II in bars 4, 7 and 11 which instructs a singer to sing again the song between the sign, and Da Capo at the end which instructs a performer to sing from the beginning and end where fine is. The repetition of these songs emphasises the message and makes it easy for the masses to understand thereby making both suitable for the celebration.

In conclusion, both songs can be sung at the celebration of the Uganda Martyrs. My personal preference however would be “Mu Kkubo Eryo’musalaba”. This is because of the message it holds which is encouraging the people to keep focused on the way of the cross while following Jesus Christ. It speaks to all Christians and not just an individual and would certainly resonate with all the people in attendance.

GUIDE FOR EXPECTED RESPONSES - ITEM 4

Candidate writes an introduction showing the reason for analysing the music presented in relation to the performance.

In consideration of Jobo and Apok’s view evaluates what would work if Jobo performs with or without accompaniment. (This should be presented in paragraphs for each analysed element).

Concludes by giving a personal opinion on what would be the better choice for such a piece of music.

EXAMPLE OF POSSIBLE RESPONSES

A performance of classical music should be directed to the music provided and what it calls for. Apok and Jobo have different views on what can work but analysis of the Music in “AND YE NOW THEREFORE HAVE SORROW” will definitely give the proper and most effective way to perform it.

The song “And Ye Now Therefore Have Sorrow” is in key G major. Key refers to the tonality of a music piece. G major is a comfortable key for all voices because it is not high or very low. Jobo, seeing the key and analysing the pitches wants to perform the song without accompaniment since the pitches fall within an acceptable vocal range. Her decision is based on her previous experience of the instrumentalist who failed to play in the original key of the music she was performing. Singing acapella gives her confidence and assurance of maintaining the original key of this music. On the other hand, Apok stresses that Jobo be accompanied by the orchestra since the orchestra has many players who are professionals in their instruments and have been practicing this music in key G major. The instruments will articulate the key clearly and help Jobo maintain it throughout her performance as it is very easy for one to change keys without instrumentation.

Time signature is another element of music that is considered in analysing the song “And Ye Now Therefore Have Sorrow”. In this song, the time signature is indicated by the symbol C which in full stands for common time which is 4^4 meaning that there are four crotchet beats in a bar. The time signature in this music makes the beats sound regular and steady. When Jobo went through the music, she realized that she can sing this song without accompaniment since common time is easy to follow. However, Apok emphasises that Jobo must be accompanied by the orchestra because the instruments will guide on her on when to come in with the vocal part.

Ultimately, Jobo can do a good job singing this song without accompaniment because it is possible. However, analysis of the piece shows that the music elements provided for in the piece will best amplify the performance if it is performed with the orchestra.

PART II

Item 5&6 – MUSIC INDUSTRY PRACTICES

A candidate, in this item is expected to:

- i. Read the scenario presented and identify the challenge/situation in the scenario
- ii. Give a general introduction to the essay by identifying the problem in the scenario
- iii. Evaluate the situation as regards event planning and management in the music industry, the ethical, legal practices and the contribution of various stakeholders within the industry.
- iv. Evaluates by identifying $\frac{3}{4}$ of the concerns on event planning and management, legal and ethical issues, stake holder involvement while explaining them and linking them to the problem in the scenario presented.

The candidate's response should be in form of an essay and the following attributes should be exhibited

ITEM 5

GUIDE FOR EXPECTED RESPONSES - ITEM 5

Candidate writes an introduction showing the situation presented in the scenario.

Considers each shortfall and explains the danger therein. Offers advice that can help them to have a good fundraising function. (This should be presented in paragraphs for each concern handled).

Concludes the essay in relation to the scenario.

EXAMPLE OF POSSIBLE RESPONSES

Kalongo Family Troupe has their heart in the right place. A fundraising for an orphanage is a beautiful idea that should be supported with full attendance. They however need to plan better, work with all stakeholders necessary to pull off a stellar performance as there seems to be a number of loopholes that need to be addressed.

A key factor in preparing for a performance is stakeholder coordination and responsibilities. The troupe needs to allocate roles amongst themselves or hire people who can perform these duties. There is need for an events manager, publicity officer and finance manager. Each will be responsible for what he or she is supposed to do. This brings specialisation among the members and each person will work to ensure that they have done their part because no one would wish to be blamed for the failure of the performance. When people see such cooperation among the members, they will automatically be excited to attend the performance. This will make it possible for the troupe to raise money for the orphanage.

It is illegal and outright unethical for any troupe to perform a song of another artist without their permission. Kalongo Family Troupe should seek permission from the local artist so that he allows them to perform his song. Since the artist is from the community and the community members love his music, making his song to be one of those to be performed for the fundraising will increase the turn up in large numbers and therefore have a successful fundraising.

At the end of the day, a successful performance is a unity of many work forces and major considerations of how an event runs, the legalities involved and full input of all stakeholders. Once all these issues are addressed, Kalongo Family Troupe is bound to have a successful fundraiser and be able to help the orphanage.

ITEM 6

GUIDE FOR EXPECTED RESPONSES - ITEM 6

Candidate writes an introduction showing the situation presented in the scenario.

Considers each problem presented and offers possible solutions to each. (This should be presented in paragraphs for each concern handled).

Concludes the essay in relation to the scenario.

EXAMPLE OF POSSIBLE RESPONSES

The organisation of a large-scale music concert is one of the most demanding undertakings in the creative and entertainment industries. It requires the simultaneous coordination of logistical, financial, legal, and relational elements, each of which, if mismanaged, has the potential to unravel months of planning and cause reputational or financial harm to all parties involved. Bugo City's annual music concert, a celebrated cultural tradition that commemorates the city's achievements, now stands at a critical crossroads. Three interconnected challenges threaten its viability this year: a forced change in venue that has alarmed sponsors and raised fears of low attendance; the potential withdrawal of key sponsors whose financial support underpins the event; and, most urgently, a copyright infringement issue arising from the unauthorised use of a local artist's melody in a promotional advertisement that has already gone viral across multiple media platforms.

As a music student with grounding in event planning and management, legal and ethical frameworks governing the music industry, and the principles of stakeholder engagement, this essay provides a comprehensive advisory to the organisers of the Bugo City concert. While the challenges are serious, they are not insurmountable, and a combination of proactive communication, legal compliance, and creative event management can not only rescue the concert but potentially enhance its profile.

The decision to relocate the concert from the city's customary venue to an alternative site outside the city boundaries is, in event management terms, a significant operational disruption. Familiarity is one of the most underestimated determinants of audience attendance behaviour; regular attendees develop habitual expectations about how, where, and when an event occurs, and disruptions to these expectations directly affect their motivation to attend. The concerns raised by sponsors are therefore not unfounded. Lower attendance translates to reduced gate revenue, diminished audience engagement, and a weakened value proposition for sponsors whose returns are partly calculated on footfall and media exposure.

To deal with this challenge, the organisers should begin by conducting a formal venue feasibility and audience impact assessment. This involves surveying likely attendees about transportation access, estimating the reduction in walk-in audiences, and identifying logistical barriers such as parking, public transport connectivity, and accessibility for persons with disabilities. Once these barriers are mapped, targeted solutions can be developed, including subsidised or free shuttle services from the city centre to the new venue, designated parking facilities, and clear directional signage. of attendance, and any reduction in that effort directly improves turnout.

Beyond logistics, the organisers should leverage the new venue as a differentiating feature rather than a liability. If the alternative venue offers unique characteristics like a larger outdoor space, scenic surroundings, or superior acoustic infrastructure, these should be foregrounded in all marketing communications. Organizers could introduce new experiential elements at the alternative venue including food festivals, art installations, pre-show entertainment, or themed zones that are explicitly tied to the venue's distinct character. This reframes the relocation as an upgrade rather than a downgrade.

Additionally, the organisers should implement an early-bird ticket incentive programme. Offering discounted tickets for early purchases, group discounts, and student pricing serves a dual purpose. It generates advance revenue that reduces financial exposure and it builds a committed attendance base before the event, providing sponsors with concrete evidence of audience interest. Digital pre-registration data and early ticket sales figures are powerful reassurance tools when communicating with anxious sponsors.

The most urgent and potentially most damaging challenge facing the organisers is the use of a popular local artist's melody in the promotional advertisement without his permission. The stakeholder's concern is legally well-founded. Under copyright law as codified in Uganda's Copyright and Neighbouring Rights Act (Cap. 215) and consistent with international frameworks established by the Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works (1886, as revised), a musical composition is protected intellectual property from the moment of its creation, without the requirement of formal registration. The copyright vests in its creator and encompasses the exclusive rights of reproduction, adaptation, distribution, public performance, and broadcast.

The organisers must act swiftly and decisively. The following steps are recommended in order of urgency.

First and most critically, the organisers should cease broadcasting the infringing advertisement immediately. All media houses airing the advertisement should be contacted without delay and requested to pull the content. While this will disrupt the current promotional momentum, continuing to broadcast a work over which a legal dispute may arise exposes the organizers to escalating liability. Every additional broadcast makes the infringement worse than it already is.

Second, the organisers should seek legal counsel from a copyright or entertainment lawyer as a matter of urgency. A qualified lawyer will assess the extent of the infringement, advise on the strength of any potential claim by the artist, and guide negotiations. Legal advice should be obtained before any direct approach is made to the artist, to ensure that communications are framed in a manner that does not inadvertently constitute an admission of liability.

Third, the organisers should approach the artist directly and in good faith. In many copyright disputes involving cultural events, a prompt and sincere approach to the rights holder, acknowledging the oversight, apologising unreservedly, and offering fair compensation or a licensing arrangement can resolve the matter without resort to litigation. The artist may, upon direct engagement, agree to grant a retroactive license for the use of his melody, potentially in exchange for recognition as a contributor to the event, a performance slot at the concert, or a negotiated licensing fee. In the music industry, the relationship between artists and event organisers is often collaborative in nature, and disputes that escalate to formal legal proceedings are frequently the result of communication failures rather than disagreements about rights.

It would be advisable to document all communications with the artist and to formalise any agreement reached in writing, specifying the scope of the licence, the territory, the duration, and any financial or non-financial consideration provided. This protects both parties and creates a clear record should any future dispute arise.

If negotiations with the artist do not result in a licensing agreement, or while those negotiations are ongoing, the organisers should commission a wholly original advertisement. This would involve engaging a music producer to compose an original jingle or score for the event that does not reproduce any element of the protected work. Alternatively, the organisers could approach other musicians particularly emerging artists who may welcome the exposure and negotiate a licensing agreement from the outset, ensuring that all rights clearances are obtained before the new advertisement goes to air.

Beyond the strict legal analysis, there is an important ethical dimension to this situation that the organisers should take seriously. The use of another person's creative work without their knowledge or consent is a violation not merely of law but of professional ethics in the music and events industries. The artist's work represents his creativity, identity, and economic livelihood. Using it to promote an event, even one with cultural significance without compensation or acknowledgment diminishes the value placed on artistic labour. The organisers should, in their communications with the artist and with the public, acknowledge this ethical dimension openly and demonstrate a genuine commitment to making it right.

The concept of stakeholder management is central to the success of any large-scale event. In the context of the Bugo City concert, the stakeholder map includes the city authorities who commission and authorise the event, corporate sponsors whose financial contributions fund it, the media houses responsible for promotional broadcasting; the local artist whose creative work has been used, the audience whose attendance validates the event's cultural purpose, and various operational partners including venue management, security, and logistics providers. Each of these stakeholders has distinct interests and concerns, and effective stakeholder management requires that each set of concerns be addressed specifically and respectfully.

The most immediate stakeholder crisis is the potential withdrawal of sponsors. Sponsors are not merely sources of funding. They are partners in the event's success, and their public association with the concert gives it commercial credibility. Their threatened withdrawal is, at its core, a risk management response. They are weighing the reputational and financial risks of continued association against the benefits of sponsorship. The organisers' task is to reframe that risk assessment by reducing perceived uncertainty and demonstrating that the event is professionally managed and legally sound.

The organisers should convene an urgent sponsors' briefing. This should be a formal meeting, in person or via video conference, at which the organisers present a comprehensive update on all aspects of the event, including the venue situation and the steps being taken to address it, the copyright matter and the remedial actions underway, and the commercial projections for the event. Transparency is paramount. Sponsors who feel they are being kept informed and that their concerns are being taken seriously are considerably more likely to maintain their commitments than those who receive only reassurances without substance. At the briefing, the organisers should present concrete data and plans. Regarding attendance, this means sharing pre-registration figures, ticket sales data, transportation arrangements, and social media engagement metrics that demonstrate audience interest. Regarding the copyright issue, sponsors should be assured that the infringing advertisement has been withdrawn, that legal counsel is engaged, and that a replacement advertisement is being produced. These are not merely reassurances. They are demonstrations of organisational competence that rebuild sponsor confidence.

The organisers should also consider offering sponsors enhanced value propositions to compensate for the disruption. This could include additional branding opportunities at the new venue, increased on-stage recognition during the event, exclusive VIP hospitality packages, or post-event audience data and media coverage reports. Where sponsors remain at risk of withdrawal, the organisers could explore the possibility of phased payment arrangements, under which sponsors are not required to commit their full sponsorship amount until certain attendance or promotional milestones have been met. This reduces the sponsors' exposure while keeping them within the event partnership. It also signals the organisers' confidence in the event's success, since they are effectively guaranteeing performance against benchmarks.

Conclusively, the Bugo City Annual Music Concert faces a convergence of challenges that would test any event management team: a venue relocation that has unsettled sponsors, an imminent funding crisis driven by threatened sponsor withdrawal, and a live copyright infringement issue whose public visibility makes swift resolution essential. However, as this essay has argued, each of these challenges is manageable through the application of sound event management principles, adherence to legal and ethical frameworks, and proactive, transparent stakeholder engagement.