

KAMSSA PRE MOCK EXAMINATIONS 2025

Uganda Certificate of Education

S.4 ENGLISH LANGUAGE

PAPER 1

TIME: 2 Hours 15 minutes

INSTRUCTIONC TO CANDIDATES

- This Paper consists of two Sections; A and B. It has four items in all.
- Section A is compulsory.
- Answer one item from Section B.
- Answers to Section A must written in the spaces provided.
- Answers to Section B must be written in the answer booklet (s) provided.
- Any additional items answered will not be scored

SECTION A

Item 1. As an ardent cultural activist who is concerned with the high rate of cultural erosion today, given chance to address the public on the strategies of preventing the modern-day cultural erosion, write what you will share to the addressee on the same topic. Use 110 words.

Cultural erosion is a global issue that affects many communities and countries. It requires ongoing efforts to promote and preserve cultural heritage for future generations. It is important for communities to recognize the value of cultural diversity and to work towards preserving and celebrating it. Cultural diversity enriches our understanding of the world and fosters respect and appreciation for different ways of life. Education and awareness is also key in rejuvenating culture. Educating people about their cultural heritage and the importance of preserving it can help ensure cultural traditions and practices are passed down to future generations. It is imperative that culture is preserved in black and white. Documentation and preservation of culture through recordings either video or audio or in books is key. Such cultural literature can be passed on from generation to generation, thereby reserving core information. There is need for cultural exchange and collaboration in order to promote the understanding and appreciation of different cultures. Emphasizing the traditional language use through the literature of the land. Language is key to the preservation of cultures. It is the emblem and code into which culture is impeded. The use of proverbs, folktales and folklores plays an important role here. This together with supporting local cultures such as in local artists, musicians, cultural dancers and promoting cultural events, can help reduce erosion. There is need to create museums and archives or cultural centers for the exhibition of cultural

This image shows a full page of white paper with horizontal dotted lines. The lines are evenly spaced and run across the width of the page, providing a guide for handwriting practice. There are no margins, text, or other markings on the page.

It started with a whisper, a rumor of a leader's hidden agenda, but soon the truth would come to light, and nothing would ever be the same.

At the helm of the Kumasu industries' leadership was its Chief Executive Officer, Regaemafin Mwaura commonly known as Reg Ma among his associates and workers. Reg Ma was a man in his late 50s with a receding hairline and paunchy stomach. He had an archaic reputation for being one of the most inhuman leaders to his employees the company had ever seen, but few people outside knew him for that. They took him for a generous and godly man, a reason why many turned up for the interviews with the image of the holy Reg Ma.

Reg Ma's leadership style was autocratic and rode on the wheels of corruption and nepotism. He demanded absolute loyalty from his employees, and in return, he offered them nothing but work overload and exploitation. The company had put up an advert and many contenders had flocked it to put in their bids for the various job opportunities. Over one hundred jobs were up for grab but a number of close to one thousand people had applied and had turned up to face the panel.

They sat in grave silence. The room was silent, the only sound was the rustling of papers as Reg Ma and his other subordinates sorted them for the final interview list. As the clock ticked to the deadline hour, the applicants held their breath, waiting to hear from the CEO the amount of lubricant that would oil his fingers this time around; they had always been told that Reg Ma gave jobs at a cost.

"I take this singular honour to welcome you to Kumasu Industries Limited." The CEO remarked.

"I am Regaemafin Mwaura alias Reg Ma as my circles call me. I am the CEO of this company." He stroked his belly and demanded for an applause which the applicants definitely gave.

"First things first! to get a job in this Company is as easy as following the rules. You must all oil the fingers of the CEO. Each one of you must come to my office and present an envelope whose breadth alone is enough to earn you a job." He left for his office and waited.

It was Sophia, a well-meaning and fair lady who faced Reg Ma first. Having been granted permission; she put her weight on a well-furnished chair. She presented her papers on the table. The CEO, with much anticipation, grabbed the envelope and popped into it, only to find Sophia's academic documents. His face reddened.

"Young lady, your envelope doesn't resemble your pretty face. Haven't you been told that in this company, your distinctions and first class degrees hold no water? Do you think CEO Reg Ma will eat your documents?" He stood up and threw them on to her. He then moved closer to the trembling lady and, touching her chin as if she were her child, whispered into her ears;

"Pretty girl, just know, I have been looking for someone with a feminine touch like yours in this company. You have the job...but one thing." He pulled her from the chair and the two stood straight. He stroked her lips and nudged her fingers.

"You have the job...but enter that room and wait for me." She proceeded to the room which was part of his spacious office in the far corner. It is in this room where girls sign their job contracts from. Entry to the room was the first step to earn a job in the company, more so if one danced to his tunes. Wafula, was the next candidate to enter the office. He wore a faded, threadbare shirt with a frayed collar. His pants were stained, wrinkled and held together with a frayed belt. A tattered and worn jacket hung loosely from his shoulders. A scruffy beard and moustache framed his weathered face.

"Are you a farmer or a rascal?" The CEO asked. Wafula, sat quietly and placed his empty envelope on the table. I call it empty because it had only academic documents. Only realizing that Wafula, too had no money. Reg Ma scowled at him.

"Foolish Rascal. Are you aware I own a Car and I drive to work every morning." He furiously inquired.

“I am fully in the know sir.” Wafula crinkly confirmed.

“So, do you think my Car runs on urine or saliva?” He shouted as he hit the table and shoved him out of his office. “Get out of my office...smelling rat!” He spat on him as went out and wondered why the concept of the fruits of leadership had not sunk deep into people’s heads.

The next two candidates were wealthier ladies who could afford to offer a bribe of seven million each. They were automatically granted positions. The only man who got a job, was given on account that he was of the same tribe with Reg Ma and they spoke the same mother language as he negotiated for the job. Ten of the ladies who took up the managerial positions for different departments had got them at the cost of their bodies, and they had learnt from him that in his company, job contracts for women were signed on their thighs. The last cohort of the women employed, were Reg Ma’s close relatives and friends. Even when they did not have any academic qualifications for the job, they were placed in high ranking positions.

Most of his experienced employees were given manual work. They were made to work for long hours a day and four extra hours at night, which he called commitment hours. He gave them only one stingy meal a day and almost all of them had arrears of five months and so. No medical condition was attended to for these lower level workers and none of them was granted permission to go home before two months elapsed.

(Adapted from Echoes of the Sun by Kule Ernest)

Respond appropriately to each of the following tasks according to the text:

- a) They sat in grave silence. The room was silent, the only sound was the rustling of papers as Reg Ma and his other subordinates sorted them for the final interview list. Explain why the people had turned up to wait anxiously at the company premises for the interviews.

.....
.....
.....

- b) He pulled her from the chair and the two stood straight. (Rewrite the sentence in the past perfect tense.)

.....
.....
.....

- c) Different people have different personalities. In reference to the text above, what type of person is Reg Ma the leader of the Kumasu Industries Limited?

.....
.....
.....
.....

- d) In life, we learn from our own experiences or those of others. What can one learn from the text above?

.....
.....
.....

-
- e) People’s actions and behaviour impact us differently. Describe the feelings the text above brings in you.

-
-
-
- f) If you were the leader of the lower-level workers who are exploited by their leader Reg Ma, what would you do to avoid such inhumanity in the company?

.....

SECTION B

Either

3. Being patriotic involves embracing one’s country’s art, culture and values. Instead of appreciating, listening and watching local music and movies, many young people today find pleasure in appreciating foreign entertainment content. The patriotism club in your school is going to carry out an outreach to teach young people the importance of loving their country. You have been selected as the moderator of the outreach.

You carried out a survey to find out why there is a preference for foreign entertainment content in comparison to the locally created content. Present your findings in a write-up to be presented to your teacher

Or

4. In Ngariam Constituency, there are many youths both in and out of school. there is a lot of youth unemployment and moral degeneration and the activities that they try to carry out are not well funded. In addition, the government programs for the youth do not benefit them.

You intend to contest for the position of youth member of parliament in your constituency. Write your talk rallying the youth of Ngariam to vote for you in the forth coming elections

END