Climate change has become one of the greatest challenges facing many countries today. Rising temperatures, prolonged droughts, floods and environmental degradation continue to affect agriculture, health and education. Governments alone cannot solve these problems. Communities should work together by planting trees, conserving wetlands, avoiding environmental pollution and using natural resources responsibly. Young people also have an important role to play through innovation, environmental awareness campaigns and volunteering in community activities. Sustainable development requires every citizen to protect the environment for the benefit of both present and future generations.
